Boston's Seaport is getting an indoor beach

Check out IDBeach at the Innovation and Design Building. MATT JUUL

Winter may be coming, but that doesn't mean you can't enjoy a beach day in Boston's Seaport.

IDBeach debuts at the Innovation and Design Building this weekend, offering all the amenities of a seaside getaway without having to leave the city. The indoor beach will set up shop at the Innovation and Design Building, complete with cabanas, umbrellas, palm trees and even an "ocean view."

In honor of the new space, a series of events featuring food, drinks, music and more will take over IDBeach on Saturdays, beginning Nov. 11 with a "Kinda Cruise" Day party.

This weekend's get-together will pay homage to the many travellers who set sail from nearby Flynn Cruise Port with a day of "soothing yacht rock tunes" and games, according to a press release. The event will also feature all-you-can-eat oysters courtesy of East Boston Oysters and Chatham Shellfish Company for the first 100 tickets sold.

Following Saturday's festivities, the fun returns on Nov. 18 with back-to-back film screenings of classics "Blue Crush" and "Point Break." Dubbed the "Cereal Cinema Brunch Double Feature," the event includes all-you-can-eat popcorn, candy and cereal, as well as a cash mimosa bar.

The beach bonanza continues on Saturday, Dec. 2, with a '90s-themed beach party. Relive the era of "90210" and Nintendo 64 with throwback games, a cash bar, plus live '90s music provided by Boston-based cover band The Unoriginals.

The indoor beach parties wrap up on Saturday, Dec. 16, with a free trivia night hosted by American Institute of Graphic Arts (AIGA). The event will also feature a cash bar, as well as the chance to win special prizes.

All events are 21+ and cost $12 to attend, except for the AIGA trivia night.

Linda Cardellini: Mark Wahlberg fed Wahlburgers to 'Daddy's Home 2' cast

The comedy sequel filmed around Boston this spring.

MATT JUUL

Mark Wahlberg made sure that Linda Cardellini and the cast of "Daddy's Home 2" were well fed as they shot the comedy sequel in his home state earlier this year.

As the face of his family's famed restaurant chain, it comes as no surprise that the Boston actor served up a few Wahlburgers to his co-stars during production for the film, which hits theaters this weekend. Cardellini recently revealed to Metro that she and the rest of the "Daddy's Home 2" crew got to munch on the burgers, as well as check out a few of Wahlberg's favorite restaurants, while they were in town.

"Yeah, everyone tried Wahlburgers," Cardellini said. "We went to his favorite Italian restaurants. We also, on our own time, my family was there and we would go to the Dumpling House. They had the most delicious dumplings."

Aside from eating "amazing" Italian and Chinese food, the "Bloodline" and "Avengers: Age of Ultron" star was blown away by her first trip to the Boston area. Cardellini, who plays the ex-wife of Wahlberg's Dusty and wife of Will Ferrell's Brad, was awestruck by how towns like Concord transformed into picturesque, Christmas-themed settings for the film.

GETTY IMAGES

"They looked so beautiful and idyllic. They're so charming, these towns," Cardellini said. "I'd never been to Boston before. It was my first time there, and it's a nice way to go when you're part of a big movie."

Overall, Cardellini admitted that she had a lot of fun joking around and working on "Daddy's Home 2" with Wahlberg, Ferrell and fellow Massachusetts native John Cena. The comedy centers around a father and stepfather who must join forces to make Christmas perfect for their family, including their own dads, played by John Lithgow and Mel Gibson.

Keep an eye out for one of Cardellini's favorite scenes with her on-screen hubby, which involved smacking Ferrell in the face.

"I was like, 'What do I do?'" He was like, 'Go for it. I want you to slap my face,'" she said. "So he just lets me slap him across the face. He's so much fun. He's such a generous guy in person and as an actor. There's no better guy to do comedy with."

Should a third "Daddy's Home" film get the green light, the former "Freaks and Geeks" star hopes to return to the francise in order to represent all the moms out there.

"I really love working with everybody. It's really fun," Cardellini said. "Someone's got to be in there representing the mommies, so absolutely."

"Daddy's Home 2" hits theaters on Nov. 10.

A Boogie wit da Hoodie talks Chris Brown, Cardi B and staying focused

The breakout hip-hop star performs in Mass. this weekend.

MATT JUUL

Artist Julius Dubose, better known by his stage name A Boogie wit da Hoodie, is ready to take hip-hop by storm.

The rapper, who performs in Worcester on Sunday, has quickly become one of the hottest new stars in the game thanks to a slew of hit singles, as well as his critically-acclaimed debut album "The Bigger Artist." While the 21-year-old is hitting the road for a solo tour and has already worked alongside big names like Drake, he's not letting fame go to his head.

"The pressure doesn't really faze me," A Boogie tells Metro. "As long as I do things to make my life and the people around me successful, everything's going to be alright."

A Boogie wit da Hoodie performs at the Palladium on Nov. 12. GETTY IMAGES

As an up-and-coming artist hustling his way through hip-hop, A Boogie has relied on his older, famous friends for career advice. In particular, the rapper points to Chris Brown for inspiring him to become more involved in other aspects of music.

"He was basically telling me about being more into the creative part of your music," A Boogie says. "He directs all of his videos, for example. He's so much into it that you can tell it's him."

The New York native believes that the Big Apple's music scene is exploding with new sounds at the moment, especially the city's budding hip-hop voices and their diverse styles. For instance, A Boogie notes that he and Cardi B have vastly different approaches, despite the fact that they both hail from the Bronx.

"People like me and Cardi B, even us two are different when it comes to music," A Boogie says. "I make love songs and she's more rapping right now. I have way more of a melodic sound from New York."

After a breakout 2017, A Boogie hopes to keep the momentum going with his music and other business ventures. Above all, the rapper wants to set a good example for his baby daughter Melody.

"My daughter inspires me the most," he says. "I'm building for her future."

MUSEUMS

Mark Dion: Misadventures of a 21st Century Naturalist

Mark Dion playfully wrestles with the tension between human and the rest of Earth in his installations. In this show, the first American survey of his work, we find such oddities as the libraries for birds, which employ real birds, and a museum-like diorama of a landfill. Pro tip: Check it out on a Thursday, when admission's free.
Through Dec. 31, Institute of Contemporary Art, 25 Harbor Shore Dr., $10-$15, icaboston.org

The Real and Reel Casablanca; American Troops Enter World War II, Landing in North Africa

Fact and fiction collide in this exhibition on both the 1942 classic "Casablanca," and the American invasion of North Africa in November 1942, after which the film was rushed to release, to benefit from the headlines. The artifacts on display are mostly from the invasion, but there's a couple from the film, including a chair from Rick's Café.

BOOKS

Matthew Weiner

Given his role in the renaissance of "prestige television," it's not surprising "Mad Men" creator and writer Matthew Weiner might try a different medium altogether. Now he's got a novel, "Heather, the Totality," about the rather eventful collision of the lives of two young people: the privileged, smothered Heather and the poor, neglected Bobby. He'll discuss it at the Brattle Friday night.

5 Ways to honor service members this Veterans Day

Show your appreciation for our country's bravest at these events in Boston.

ZIPPORAH OSEI

Boston hosts a pair of parades on Veterans Day. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Veterans are some of our nation's most courageous people, and every year we take a day to thank them for the sacrifices that they've made for our nation. This weekend, take part in these Boston-area events to commemorate the men and women who fight for our freedom.

1. Veterans Day parades
Every year, rain or shine, the city of Boston hosts a parade on Veterans Day. This year, the festivities begin at 1 p.m. on Boylston and Charles Streets and continues throughout the downtown area. Right on the heels of that is the Veterans for Peace Parade, an event organized to honor the holiday as a day of peace. Both parades end at City Hall Plaza on Saturday, plus you can hear a variety of speeches, poetry readings and music in front of Faneuil Hall next to the statue of Revolutionary-era patriot Samuel Adams.

2. Fort Devens Museum
Get an in depth look into wars of the past at Fort Devens this Veterans Day. Visitors can walk through the process of identifying the remains of U.S. soldiers declared missing in action during World War II. You can also hear a historical narrative that combines poetry, prose and letters that reflect the brutality of WWI. The event will end with a speech from William S. Glazier II, a frontline anti-tank gunner who fought in WWII.

3. USS Constitution Museum
The museum is honoring the men and women who fight for our country by partnering with Operation Gratitude to have guests create "survival" bracelets that will be sent to troops overseas and first responders here at home. Visitors can also write a thank you letter that will be included in one of the 100,000 care packages that Operation Gratitude sends out each

4. Disabled American Veterans 5K Run
This run, walk, roll and motorcycle ride in Boston on Saturday is hosted by the non-profit Disabled American Veterans to thank those who served and raise awareness for injured veterans. Before the race begins at 9 a.m., grab a cup of coffee, pick up goodies and give-aways from sponsors, plus visit the red carpet to meet some inspiring local veterans and service members. Afterwards, continue the celebration at a post-event party with the veterans and their families. Registration is free for all veterans at dav5k.org.

5. Sip, Support and Salute
Between Nov. 10 and 12, you can pour one out in support of our veterans. Johnnie Walker, the Scotch whiskey brand, will donate to the non-profit Hire Heroes USA to support veteran communities and encourages you to try their signature cocktails, The Liberty and Old Glory. You can support Sip, Support and Salute by trying the cocktails during Veterans Day weekend at over a dozen locations in Massachusetts, including The Rising in Cambridge, O'Neill's and Brodie's Seaport in Salem, as well as Union Street in Newton.

Returning vets natural fit for construction, development jobs

WRITTEN BY
Amy Smith

SKANSKA

The nation's deteriorating infrastructure continues to make headlines, but the news comes with one bright spot – a tremendous amount of potential work for construction and development companies. A shortage of skilled labor in the industry, however, is creating staffing challenges for these badly needed projects.

But there could be an untapped labor force staring the industry in the face: military veterans.

Roughly 200,000 military personnel transition into the civilian workforce each year, with the veteran population expected to increase 46 percent by 2019. Ingrained in veterans are skill sets and values that seamlessly transfer over to the construction jobsite.

The high focus on teamwork and safety, which is critical for success and longevity, is a natural fit for returning vets. At Skanska, the global construction and development firm, military veterans have greatly contributed to the successes of the business. In fact, this year, Skanska launched a military recruitment campaign to bring in top talent from this labor pool.

Veterans especially shine in the construction and development industry for a number of reasons:

- They work well in a team: Veterans are goal-oriented and trained to look out for the safety of others.
- They have a heightened sense of duty: Veterans understand that the whole is only as strong as its individual parts. As such, they strive to do their best for their country and fellow team members.
- They're organized and self-disciplined: Military vets are taught how to maintain order and a physical space that results in a keen attention to detail.
- They exhibit in-demand skills: Veterans often acquire advanced skills with computers, software and technology, heavy equipment, and tools common to many construction and development jobs.
- They're great problem solvers: While in the field, veterans are constantly challenged to come up with creative, and sometimes crucial, solutions to seemingly unsolvable problems – on the spot.

"The military is so varied, and you have so many different people that you're working with on a daily basis that it's like drinking through a firehose," says Russell DeMartino, a Skanska Vice President in Boston, Mass.

"When you get in business settings, you have the ability to talk to any audience, whether it's the newest tradesmen working on the job with a hammer or the CEO of a company. The military prepares you to do a good job in every setting, no matter what it is."

Veterans want jobs and the industry needs talented people to join the field on the jobsites and in the offices. Why not tap into this labor pool, rich with these leadership skills, and teach them the trade?

While serving our country, these individuals developed skills and habits that make them strong assets to our workforce. It's vital that we recognize their work and commitment, while honoring and respecting all they do to afford us the freedoms we have today.

Eastie residents angry over Suffolk University dorm expansion

Suffolk University is looking to expand housing, and it has its eyes set on neighborhoods like East Boston.

SAMANTHA J. GROSS

When Maureen White lived in Fenway, she found herself among a group of residents peeved with a new neighbor who wanted to move in — Northeastern University.

White, a 37-year-old consultant, worked with neighborhood groups, urban designers and elected officials to propose alternative sites on which the university could build new dorms.

A decade later, White faces a similar situation.

Suffolk University is looking to expand housing, and it has its eyes set on neighborhoods like East Boston, where White now lives.

Suffolk Senior Vice President for External Affairs John Nucci, an Eastie native, longtime community activist and former city councilor, said the school aims to guarantee two years of university housing by next school year. As of the fall 2017 semester, less than one quarter of students live on campus in the university's dormitory buildings or apartments.

The Suffolk Journal reported recently that the school hired commercial real estate leader Colliers International, a company the school has worked with in the past, to help with the project.

It's still too early to tell where the new residences will go, Nucci said, but many students who stay off campus already live in East Boston.

"The students are there and more are coming anyway," he said.

Nucci said no matter where Suffolk chooses to build, he would be open and transparent among community members.

Pierce Giamportone, a math major and former university tour guide at Suffolk, said the lack of guaranteed housing is a key concern among parents of prospective students.

He said living off campus is part of the Suffolk lifestyle, but he would consider moving if the university provided housing.

"University-sponsored housing has better amenities, security and features I would appreciate," Giamportone, 20, said.

White, however, said Suffolk should limit enrollment numbers instead of buying land to accommodate a growing class size.

"Expanding your real estate into our neighborhood is not solving the problem," she said. "We are the ones paying the price."

White, who lives in Jeffries Point, said East Boston shouldn't have to shoulder the burden, since the neighborhood already makes sacrifices on the city's behalf.

"We have the airport, which poisons our air. They wanted to put a casino here," she said. "The neighborhood is no stranger to organizing to protect our neighbors. We are not afraid to do that."

Adam Kamoune, a third-year political science student at Northeastern, grew up in East Boston. He said there are pros to the situation, like alleviating parking issues since students don't have cars, but the school will have to "thread a very specific needle" to please residents.

State Rep. Adrian Madaro said he would support the development if it helps families who find it hard to stay in East Boston. Madaro said he also expected Suffolk to have a "robust" campaign around community engagement.

"It's my job to make sure my residents have a seat at that table," he said. "They will shape the community the way they want to see it."

Portal allows Boston-area residents to FaceTime with refugees around the world

A portal that's been on Harvard's campus and is heading to Boston College lets you connect with migrants in far-flung locations. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

On Harvard's campus, there's a portal to another world — literally.

Inside an unassuming shipping container that sits on the grass at Harvard Divinity School, students, staff and other visitors can come face-to-face with refugees around the world.

The portal is part of a project by Shared Studios, an art, design and technology collective, and it features immersive technology to connect people from around the world in real-time audio and video conversations.

This portal ended up in Massachusetts thanks to a partnership between Shared Studios, the Religious Literacy Project at Harvard Divinity School, the American Academy of Religion and Boston College.

Diane Moore, director of the Religious Literacy Project and a Harvard Divinity School lecturer, said that a crucial objective of the literacy project is to show that religion is not just about beliefs and practices but is connected to a "strong sense of values embedded in cultures and communities — sometimes explicitly religious, sometimes not." The portal is a way to share these values across religious and geographical lines.

Students come face-to-face with refugees through the portal on Harvard's campus. PROVIDED BY HARVARD DIVINITY SCHOOL

> "... it really is then about the opportunity to connect with individual people to understand both their challenges and their resilience."
> Diane Moore

Recently, Moore visited a displaced persons camp in Erbil, Iraq, and worked with refugees — some of whom had been displaced for more than three years due to the fighting in Mosul.

"One of the main concerns they have is that people hear and understand their stories," Moore said.

It was important to her to help bring the portal to the Boston area "as just one small way to help connect" people around the globe, especially concerning migration and immigration.

"There are 65 million displaced persons around the globe," she said. "Those numbers are so impossible to get your head around, it really is then about the opportunity to connect with individual people to understand both their challenges and their resilience."

Moore has been teaching specifically about the Syrian crisis, and the portal has enhanced those lessons for her students, but it's also open to anyone. Multiple high school classes have visited to talk with other teens, and poets came in to share their work. People have talked about their lives and shared specific stories from prompts, and they even sang songs together.

THERE ARE 65 MILLION DISPLACED PERSONS AROUND THE GLOBE, ACCORDING TO DIANE MOORE.

"The power of the portal is it really is an intimate space," Moore said. "It's inside this container, which is then shielded from outside. You are literally face-to-face at a full-body screen with people, so it feels like — the comment we heard from many people is that it feels like you're in the room with them."

Moore hopes to establish a permanent portal on Harvard's campus in the future, which could be used for a number of creative global collaborations. In the meantime, Thursday, Nov. 9, is the portal's last day at Harvard, but it's staying in the area by heading to Boston College next. It will be there from Nov. 13 to 16; register for a timeslot through events.bc.edu/refugee_portal.

Guns and mental health: Are shootings in the US a psychological problem?

Metro speaks with experts to learn more about the issue of access to guns in the country. FELIPE HERRERA AGUIRRE, MWN

Is gun violence a result of lax gun laws, or a mental health crisis? That's what the nation is debating after a deadly mass shooting at a Baptist church in Texas, in which 26 people lost their lives.

After the Nov. 5 massacre, President Donald Trump declared that gun ownership was not a factor and pointed to the mental health of the shooter.

Trump stated: "This is a mental health problem at the highest level."

Metro spoke with Giffords Law Center to Prevent Gun Violence Attorney Hannah Shearer about the U.S. epidemic of gun violence.

What part do gun laws play in the latest shootings in the U.S.?
The U.S. is experiencing a gun violence crisis. Americans are 25 times more likely to be killed by a gun than people in other developed nations. It's apparent that America's weak gun laws have contributed to higher rates of violence because other countries do not experience the same number of large-scale gun massacres.

Could these events be prevented?
People shouldn't have to fear being shot and killed when they're going to church or attending a music festival. The example of other countries, where people don't live with this same type of fear, shows that tougher laws can prevent both gun massacres and everyday shootings. On the state level in the U.S., there is a clear correlation between stronger gun laws and lower rates of gun violence, as experts from my organization have observed in our annual Gun Law Scorecard.

How does mental illness relate to attacks?
It's not an answer to say that we simply need to treat mental illness, because that only treats part of the problem. We also need to improve our gun laws to make sure that people who are in a mental health crisis cannot assemble arsenals of deadly weapons so quickly and easily.

But is it a problem of public health, as Trump suggests?
It is a public health crisis, but guns are the key piece of the crisis. Many proponents of relaxing gun laws in the U.S. say that if people intent on harming others can't use a firearm to carry out an attack, they'd use a truck or some other destructive weapon. … Governments are supposed to take action to protect the public from violence, and firearm violence should be no different.

What should be expected in the future?
Since the Las Vegas shooting, 35 other mass shootings have occurred where four or more victims were shot. We shouldn't have to lose innocent lives to start the conversation about preventing gun violence, but we hope that the conversation that's been started will lead to progress in the form of better gun policies.

Giffords Law Center to Prevent Gun Violence attorney Hannah Shearer weighs in on the U.S. struggle with mass shootings. MWN

GUN VIOLENCE: A LEGAL AND POLITICAL PROBLEM

Access to weapons continues to be a point of controversy and debate in the U.S. Each year around 30,000 people die in the country shot by firearms. That is 3.9 per hour. According to a survey conducted by the U.S.-based think tank Pew Research Center, 67 percent of Americans claim "personal defense" as the main reason to have weapons.

"Easy access to guns and very limited record keeping or barriers to gun ownership do play a role in the kinds of shootings we have seen," Robert Spitzer, professor of crime, law and policy and gun control at the State University of New York at Cortland, told Metro.

The barriers are seen by some as in conflict with the Second Amendment, which protects the right to own weapons. And while Spitzer says that greater control over access to weapons does not guarantee that more attacks will not occur, it could reduce the deadly consequences.

"In some cases, the perpetrators have significant mental illness. But around 95 percent of those with mental illness are not dangerous to others, so it's easy to exaggerate impact," he added.

Spitzer said that despite changes that can be made at the state level, national policies will not change.

"The national government right now is firmly in the hands of the pro-NRA party, which endorsed Trump early last year. And the Republican party is very, very conservative these days, which coincides with the far right leanings of the gun lobby. That hold on the majority party strangles the prospects of reform," Spitzer said.

To the NFL players and owners who have decided to protest the national anthem

Get down on both knees, and put your hands together to thank the men and women who GAVE THEIR LIVES and SHED THEIR BLOOD to allow you the privilege to play the game.

Danica Roem becomes Virginia's first transgender woman to be elected to office

She defeated Republican Robert G. Marshall, who is responsible for restricting transgender people from choosing which bathroom to use. LENYON WHITAKER

Virginia made history last night when Danica Roem became the first transgender woman to become an elected official.

Democratic candidate Danica Roem, 33, defeated Republican Robert G. Marshall and was elected as a member of the Virginia House of Delegates in the state's 13th District.

Marshall, 73, had served in the Virginia House of Delegates since 1992 and has referred to himself as Virginia's "chief homophobe." He spent most of his career fighting against the same rights Danica Roem stands for.

Marshall is the author of the now-voided constitutional amendment that defined marriage as between a man and a woman, and he was also responsible for proposing a bathroom bill to restrict public bathroom use by transgender people.

Roem dedicated her victory to anyone who has been discriminated against last night in her victory speech.

"To every person who's ever been singled out, who's ever been stigmatized, who's ever been the misfit, who's ever been the kid in the corner, who's ever needed someone to stand up for them when they didn't have a voice of their own," Roem said before a crowd of supporters. "This one is for you," she said.

According to The Washington Post, Roem had a very strong campaign and received more than $500,000 in donations from LGBT groups around the country.

In a Facebook post, Marshall thanked his supporters but did not congratulate Roem.

Roem, from northern Virginia, worked as a journalist. She attended St. Bonaventure University in New York where she majored in journalism. Roem later became a lead journalist for the Gainesville and Prince Williams Times in Virginia before turning to politics.

In 2013, Danica Roem, an LGBTQ rights advocate, came out as transgender. GETTY IMAGES

Freeze no more in Florida

Brrr ... it's already time to plan a beach break.

JOSHUA CROUTHAMEL
letters@metro.us

It was never going to last forever — the sunshine, the unseasonably warm temperatures, the weekends spent outside with friends and family, cocktails in hand and the smells of BBQ fare in the air. But what if it could? We've found a spot that's easy to access, full of diversions (and tasty libations) and won't require you to pack a passport ... or your fleece. Welcome to Daytona Beach, Florida.

While neighbors scrape their windshields with long-defunct Blockbuster cards or jostle for a spot on the train in rush-hour darkness, picture yourself on 23 miles of beautiful Atlantic coastline. Hard-packed white sandy beaches stretch from Ormond-by-the-Sea to Ponce Inlet, the perimeters of the Daytona area, and thankfully everything is perfectly intact — hurricane season was gentle on this part of Florida (but the state could still use your tourism dollars).

Where are we?

Lesser-known than nearby Orlando (but only an hour away), Daytona proves a great jumping-off point for those eager to soak up the rays in the center of the state, as it's also just an hour north of the Kennedy Space Center and an hour south of St Augustine. And the perfect place to give your park pass a rest and trade your space suit for a swim suit — but be prepared to explore; you can drive from one end of Daytona to the other in 30 minutes, with plenty to experience along the way.

Besides relaxing ...

Start by taking a shine to some local history. The Ponce Inlet Lighthouse is the state's tallest (take the 203 steps to the top to earn your keep), and this month celebrates its 130th year. The operator's cottages have been restored, and a museum that's even of interest to the non-museum set sheds a light (ahem) on some fascinating local history. For more, including upcoming events, visit ponceinlet.org

Right next door is the Marine Science Center — a must if kids are in tow this vacay. It has an "Aquatic Touch Pool," and as the name suggests, you're invited to roll up your sleeves and get handsy with stingrays and hermit crabs. There's also a sea turtle hospital on the premises, so prepare to learn about these beautiful creatures (and perhaps meet a few at various stages of their lives, from birth (tiny turtles!) through recovery). Contact details and hours are available at marinesciencecenter.com

If a round of golf's more to your liking, you're spoiled for choice. There are nearly two dozen nationally-ranked courses a short drive from wherever you set up camp in Daytona. And have we mentioned the weather's perfect for 18 holes roughly 250 days of the year? There's that, too.

Fast-and-furious fare

If Daytona's auto racing is of interest, make a pilgrimage to Racing's North Turn (also in Ponce Inlet). This historic beachside bar-and-resto sits on the exact location where racing began here in 1936, and races were held right out front until 1958 when Nascar came to town with the Super Speedway. You can transport yourself back to the days when drivers had to battle 2 miles of sandy beach as part of their track by pulling up a deck chair, ordering some blackened fish tacos and a cold beer,

Ponce de Leon lighthouse ISTOCK

and enjoying tons of memorabilia and live music. The website is racingsnorthturn.com

Fly-bye

It's surprisingly easy to get to Daytona Beach International Airport from the Northeast: New Yorkers have access to direct flights, and just one connection separates Boston and Philadelphia from sun and sand. If you're adding a visit to Orlando to your itinerary, direct flights await from all three cities.

Time for bed

Described as "upscale, but not uptight," the Shores Resort & Spa is the area's luxe option if you'd like to stay right on the ocean. It offers 212 guestrooms, complimentary beachfront yoga at sunrise, and for an additional charge you can arrange your charter fishing boat and surf school on site, or opt for a treatment in the spa. If you can't drag yourself off the property there's a fine-dining restaurant, cocktail lounge and tiki bar built in. For rates and availability, check out shoresresort.com

Stop imagining.
Start vacationing.

3 Things to watch for as Patriots look to bury Broncos in Denver

Killer instinct

The Patriots (6-2) have an opportunity to bury the hated Broncos (3-5) this Sunday night in Colorado as they could send Denver reeling to its fifth straight loss.

The Broncos were stunned by the lowly Giants a month ago on a Sunday night, and it's gotten worse since as they then fell at the Chargers (21-0), at the Chiefs (29-19) and at Philly (51-23). In those losses the Broncos have averaged a measly 13.0 points on offense and have allowed 31.0 points per game. We'll find out if the Patriots have a killer instinct this Sunday night, or if they'll look rusty coming off the bye. As we pointed out earlier this week, the Patriots actually aren't great in their first game coming off the bye in recent years. They're just 4-3 since 2010.

Shut 'em out

You'll recall that Brock Osweiler beat the Patriots two years ago on a Sunday night in Denver this time of year. But that Brock is long gone.

When Osweiler was the starting QB of the Texans last season in the playoffs, he was brutal against the Pats as he completed only 23-of-40 passes for 197 yards and threw three interceptions in Houston's 34-16 divisional round loss in Foxboro. Osweiler's passer rating that night was an ugly 47.6. He was equally bad against the Eagles last week, throwing two picks in a 51-23 loss.

If anyone on the Denver offense should scare the Pats it's CJ Anderson, who ran for 113 yards and two touchdowns against them two years ago. Anderson did not play against the Pats last season (a 16-3 Pats victory in Denver) due to injury.

Sling it

In the first four weeks of the season, the Pats averaged 32.2 points per game. In the Pats' last four games, they've averaged just 21.7 points per game. Now, it must be pointed out that the Pats have won each of the those low scoring games but were just 2-2 when they were involved in those early season shootouts. That said, it would be encouraging for Patriots fans to see them hang 30-plus on a Denver defense that is falling apart. The elite team in the NFC, the Eagles, put up 51 against the Broncos last week. If the Patriots truly are the class of the AFC, they should be able to put on a similar show. MATT BURKE

An offseason 'to do' list for the Red Sox

OPINION

@dannypicard

Eric Hosmer would be a perfect fit for this Red Sox team. GETTY IMAGES

For the last few weeks, all eyes have been on Alex Cora.

But now that the new Red Sox manager has officially been introduced, it's time to turn our attention towards president of baseball operations Dave Dombrowski.

This isn't me telling you Dombrowski is to blame for back-to-back first-round exits in the postseason. If anything, I believe Dombrowski deserves heavy praise for acquiring players like Chris Sale and Craig Kimbrel — to name a few — who've helped the Red Sox get back into postseason contention.

But that doesn't mean his work should be done.

As we enter Hot Stove season, Dombrowski has to find a way to improve a Red Sox team that's been good enough to win two straight AL East titles. At the same time, we shouldn't be calling for a major overhaul this winter. Changing the manager was a smart move. But between now and spring training, Dombrowski needs to focus on additions, without any subtractions.

I'm sure the "go get Giancarlo Stanton" crowd doesn't want to hear that. But I like to live in reality. And in my real-life world of baseball transactions, I think it makes more sense for the Red Sox to call the Washington Nationals and check in on 25-year-old Bryce Harper this winter than it does to give up young already-proven Major League talent to the Miami Marlins for the 28-year-old Stanton.

Harper is entering the final year of his deal, and if the Nationals think he's going to walk next winter — which he will — then they'd be foolish not to entertain trading him right now for some top prospects.

Stanton is signed to a monster contract for the next 10 years, and even though the Marlins want to rid themselves of that contract, I have a tough time believing Derek Jeter's first major move will be trading Stanton to Boston at a discounted rate.

I hope I'm wrong, of course. But while most of the spotlight is on Stanton this winter, the Red Sox should be checking in on Harper.

Anyways, back to all that "additions without subtractions" talk. The obvious move, right away, would be to sign 28-year-old first baseman Eric Hosmer.

Mitch Moreland was only on a one-year deal at short money, but he's 32-years-old and it's time for the Red Sox to upgrade that position. As a four-time Gold Glove winner and World Series champion, Hosmer would be just that.

Hosmer is a career .284 hitter who finished last season with 25 home runs, 94 RBI, and a .318 batting average. He'll be looking for a big contract, for sure, but he won't generate the same type of yearly salary as a 40 home-run guy like J.D. Martinez will.

Plus, Martinez is an outfielder. In order to bring him in, Dombrowski would have to either trade one of his current starting outfielders, or convince Hanley Ramirez to play first base all season so that Martinez can be the DH.

The smart decision would be to pay Hosmer less than Martinez, keep Ramirez as your DH, and move on to the next priority, which, once again, is an addition without a subtraction.

Also — sign Eduardo Nunez.

Knowing that 34-year-old Dustin Pedroia will miss at least the first two months of the season while recovering from knee surgery, Dombrowski needs to bring Nunez back to begin the year as the starting second baseman. This just seems like a no-brainer.

All the while, the Red Sox must make sure David Price is healthy and gets back to the mindset of being a starter. Combine all of that with the continued development of the team's young stars, and the Red Sox will be better suited to make a postseason run in 2018.

Now, it's Dombrowski's job to make it happen.

Aries You need a break. Whether you take a staycation or sign up for a class that will help ease stress, it will encourage you to relax and let life unfold naturally.

Taurus Someone will not be happy with the way things are going at home or work. Don't let your emotions take the reins and lead to regret. Remain calm and do your best.

Gemini Following your emotions will lead to temptation and misrepresentation. Be careful not to promise something you won't actually carry out. Be willing to deliver.

Cancer Money problems will surface if you are extravagant or you can't say no to someone asking for too much. Trying to buy someone's affection will not help you gain respect.

Leo You'll tend to overreact, be indulgent and end up in an emotional situation you will regret. Use your smarts to avoid trouble. Exercise and proper eating are encouraged.

Virgo Avoid being impulsive when dealing with investments or emotional matters. Take time to figure out the best way to advance. You want to make money, not lose it.

Libra Don't let impulse get the better of you. When in doubt, take a step back and think about the probable outcome of your actions. Don't let an assumption ruin a relationship.

Scorpio Emotions will be difficult to control. Avoid a trap set by one of your peers. If you want to get things done, work alone. Don't venture too far from home.

Sagittarius Financial concerns will add to your stress and could affect your health if you aren't careful when handling settlements, investments or joint funds.

Capricorn A problem will crop up if you let a sensitive issue metastasize. Do your best to contain your emotions and deal with matters professionally and without hesitation.

Aquarius Emotional spending, overreacting and getting involved in indulgent behavior won't resolve matters. Do what needs to be done and move on.

Pisces Plan a day trip or get out and shop for someone you love. You'll find out something about someone close to you if you have lunch with an old friend. EUGENIA LAST
